Development of a Device to Objectively Measure Pain (R41/R42)

National Institutes of Health (NIH), Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA)

Notice seeking applications to develop a tool to objectively measure pain for research or clinical purposes. Historically, pain in humans has been measured using subjective ratings, such as the visual analog scale, to determine presence and severity. A person simply says how much pain they are experiencing, with verbal descriptors, a scale, images depicting pain levels and the like. While this is important information, self-report is a problematic metric for both diagnostic and research purposes.

Optional letters of intent are due 30 days prior to application due date. Applications are due by December 5, 2017. Approximately $1 million is available to support up to three awards. Universities must be a partner on STTR awards.
